

Paris.—The fighting in the north continues without change. This was the only information obtainable at military headquarters this morning.

ADVENTURES OF MR. MOUSE

No details had been received of the movements of the new German force reported in the vicinity of Lille. It is everywhere now accepted that this force plans a raid at the British lines of communication through the western seacoast towns. It is also accepted that measures have been taken to check it but of necessity no information along this particular line is obtainable.

Information available here says that the bombardment of the Antwerp fortifications is increasing in violence. The German guns are being served by naval reserves. In fact, for the last five weeks there have been no first line troops in Belgium. All operations there are being conducted by the landstrum and landwehr.

The battle line on the northwest is constantly extending and, in consequence, it has been impossible for the allies to regain the territory heretofore sacrificed to the German for strategic reasons. But it is understood here that a new movement against the extreme right of the German center is now progressing rapidly and will, when completed, materially change the entire situation and give the allies a distinct advantage.

Vienna.—It is officially announced that the Russians invading Galicia in an attempt to besiege the Cracow fortifications, have been driven back from the line of the Donajec river by the reinforced Austrian armies.

The Austrians have retaken Nowy Sandec (Neu Sandec) on the southern Galician railway line just east of the Donajec river and are still in possession of Tarnow. The Russians have made several assaults in force on the Austrian positions in the vicinity of Tarnow but in every instance it is stated they have been repulsed.

The battle line in Galicia now extends from the Vistula river just north of Sezoucin along the line of railroad that parallels the Donajec connecting the northern and southern Galician lines.

The Russians have attempted to
